Long formally took up his post in Reykjavik last month. In January, while still a member of the House of Representatives, he joked on the floor about making Iceland the 52nd state with himself as governor, and apologized for the remark to Arctic Today two days later.

Trump published the map to his Truth Social account on Monday without accompanying text or explanation. It showed the United States, Canada, Central America, the Caribbean, Greenland and Iceland under the Stars and Stripes.

RÚV noted that the post came hours after the European Commission president, Ursula von der Leyen, announced in Nuuk an additional €200 million in investment in Greenland over the next two years, alongside an agreement signed by Greenland, Denmark and the EU on improved satellite connectivity. The funding is directed at clean energy, critical minerals and connectivity.
